

Ariel Shi

I think the biggest challenge in building a website is being careful with every line of code, because even one small mistake can cause problems. For me, the hardest part was adding links. But through creating my first personal website, I learned how to start and finish a project. I hope to keep learning new skills to make my websites richer and engaging.